

The qualitative transfer boundary was preserved across seeds, although absolute performance varied substantially with random initialization. Seeds are computational replicates (random initialization), not biological replicates; CIs are descriptive (t-based, n=5); no significance testing.